Marine Vet Launches Podcast to Combat Negative Stereotypes of Minorities in Cannabis

Tre'Von Dorsey shares his dynamic journey into the industry, spotlights entrepreneurs of color to follow and shares resources, information and inspiration to empower others to create unique cannabis ownership opportunities

Washington, D.C. – January 8, 2019 - Accepted Narcotics Through Introspect (ANTI) podcast's misnomer of a title may lead you to believe that this is an anti-cannabis podcast but in fact, it is just the opposite. Founder Tre'Von Dorsey founded ANTI acronym will also attract industry naysayers to the podcast's social media and website offering otherwise opposing parties a chance to get educated on the real-life effects that cannabis -- as well as current cannabis policies -- has on the lives of black and brown people.

The ANTI podcast not only informs but also entertains and offers a larger platform to elevate voices of those negatively affected by the use, criminalization and stigmatization of not only medical marijuana but cannabis in general. The stories shared on the platform are those full of inspiration told by mothers of children with difficult situations who've found relief and better quality of life with cannabis. Health care workers and related industry pros share how cannabis affects their industry, employability and how possible changes could improve their industries. Canna-preneurs, share their tales of how they overcame the negative stereotypes to carve out their own niche in the industry and change the lives of their friends and families with cannabis entrepreneurship and biz ownership.

"The numbers show that ANTI quenches a deep thirst in this market, we gained over a thousand followers and email subscribers in less than a month since launching our first episode," says Dorsey. "We look forward to producing more relevant, entertaining content and to working with other industry pros to host events, create education empowering the culture to take ownership of their own niche in the industry and launching the ANTI apparel line."
